We investigated the influence of aging and IL-4-mediated stimulation on the pattern of expression of cell surface molecules and cytokines on human CD4+ T cells. Compared to young donors, we found that aging was associated with increased IL-4R expression and decreased CCR6 expression on CD4+ T cells. CD4+ T cells from aged donors were more competent to respond to IL-4-mediated stimulation as demonstrated by increased amounts of IL-4 and IL-13 produced. Interestingly, cultured CD4+ T cells from aged donors exhibited a distinct pattern of cytokine expression compared to cells from young donors. While IL-2 and IFN-gamma mRNA levels were similar in cells from young and aged donors, IL-4 and IL-13 mRNA levels were markedly increased in aged donors. These findings indicate that the aging process results in an altered pattern of cytokine production by T cells and suggests a functional role for IL-4 in the modulation of IL-4 and IL-13 expression in aged humans.Q: How to make sure my gravity doesn't mess things up I am making a mini space-invaders game.
