I have found that I have to pass a context to the FragmentTransaction.replace(), otherwise it complains that the Fragment's context has been null. Why is this? Below is my Fragment-related code. FragmentTransaction transaction = getFragmentManager().beginTransaction(); transaction.replace(R.id.fragment_container, MyFragment.newInstance(myValues), TAG); transaction.addToBackStack(null); transaction.commit(); A: The problem is that getFragmentManager() is returning null at some point when you do this code. In particular the getFragmentManager() method returns null when called from an Activity. If you can, avoid calling this method from an Activity, and instead use the getSupportFragmentManager() method to get the FragmentManager.
