What's New In?

For the first time in Egypt's military-backed government's history, the president of the country's Shura Council, the upper house of parliament, is not a government member. Adly Mansour, a former political science professor and last year's winner of an election in which the opposition received only 47.6 percent of the vote, was named by the head of Egypt's de facto ruling council on Wednesday to become the new president. He will be sworn in on Friday, and the elections to the council will be called for the first time since the 2011 revolution. In a statement, the powerful military council named Mansour and two other council members to serve as presidents — replacing Mohamed El-Baradei, who has been named to the same position after weeks of acrimony, primarily over El-Baradei's demands to be reinstated as prime minister. The army council also named three others to serve as vice presidents. Energy policy is not rocket science. The topic is broad but it can be explained in simple terms. The U.S. Government has a duty to protect the general welfare of the people. This means that the U.S. Government is only going to allow out of state oil companies to drill for oil in the country, and then those companies have to be paid for what they produce. Thus, the U.S. Government, in order to protect the welfare of the general public, had to crack down on what previously was considered to be the violation of the United States Constitution by state oil companies. Energy policy is not rocket science. Energy policy is not only about producing more oil. Energy policy is about having enough oil to survive. If Americans do not have enough oil to survive, then it is clear that the U.S. Government must have broken its law. After all, the United States Government is the only government, save for the Communist (now defunct) Government, with the right to declare war. The communist government was not declared an "act of war". The U.S. Government can also declare a war on its own people and on its own citizen companies that violate the U.S. Constitution. The U.S. Government has failed to protect the welfare of its people. Those people who have been successful in violating the U.S. Constitution by creating their own private oil companies have enjoyed the benefits of that violation. However, the U.S.
